Nina Chanel Abney

@ninachanel

2022

#1 on map

Combining representation and abstraction, Nina Chanel Abney's paintings capture the frenetic pace of contemporary culture. Broaching subjects as diverse as race, celebrity, religion, politics, sex, and art history, her works eschew linear storytelling in lieu of disjointed narratives. The effect is information overload, balanced with a kind of spontaneous order, where time and space are compressed and identity is interchangeable. Her distinctively bold style harnesses the flux and simultaneity that has come to define life in the 21st century.

Through a bracing use of color and unapologetic scale, Abney's canvases propose a new type of history painting, one grounded in the barrage of everyday events and funneled through the velocity of the internet.

Abney was born in Chicago and currently lives and works in New York. Her work is included in collections around the world, including the Brooklyn Museum, The Rubell Family Collection, Bronx Museum, and the Burger Collection, Hong Kong.

#2 on map

Derrick Adams is a Baltimore-born, Brooklyn, New York-based artist whose critically admired work spans painting, collage, sculpture, performance, video, and sound installations. His multidisciplinary practice engages the ways in which individuals' ideals, aspirations, and personae become attached to specific objects, colors, textures, symbols, and ideologies. His work probes the influence of popular culture on the formation of self-image, and the relationship between man and monument as they coexist and embody one another. Adams is also deeply immersed in questions of how African American experiences intersect with art history, American iconography, and consumerism. Most notably in his Floater series, he portrays Black Americans at leisure, positing that respite itself is a political act when embraced by black communities. The radicality of this position has materialized in Adams' work across his Deconstruction Worker, Figure in the Urban Landscape, and Beauty World series.

#4 on map

Liz Markus paints cool things she is interested in, often working on multiple, related series simultaneously. Her work is informed by her experience growing up as Gen X and influenced by the rawness of punk and grunge music and culture.

Her process is intuitive but often inspired by continuing points of interest including dinosaurs, hippies, cavemen, socialites, witches, monsters, and fashion. She is interested in psychological repression versus liberation and as she believes the non-verbal mind makes the best paintings, sees her task as allowing the subconscious to guide her work as much as possible.

Markus uses bold and colorful washes of acrylic paint usually on unprimed canvas. Her technique and thoughts about art evolved from hanging out at the Albright-Knox Art Gallery while growing up in Buffalo NY and absorbing the work of the Abstract Expressionists, Stain Painters, and Pop Artists so prominent in their collection.

I am a painter and designer from St. Louis, Missouri. While gaining my BFA in Graphic Design at Kansas City Art Institute, I continued to focus on my independent practice and business, Hevcasso Creations LLC. Since its inception in 2013, I've been a part of group shows both locally and nationally, have had a solo show in New York and Chicago through a collaboration with rapper Mick Jenkins & Wallplay Gallery, received a RAC grant, and have had numerous commissions of varying scale. Creating and cultivating my own brand and ideas as a fine artist while being a channel for others' ideas as a designer is where I find myself. These concepts inform my aesthetic and conceptual decisions. I visualize these themes through the lens of identity. Specifically, self-portraits of the female form, which speak to my own existence as a black woman. This work began as a releasing of my own anxieties and my seeking to regain ownership of my autonomy. The daily overthinking and anxiety placed upon us by the societal pressures of both race and gender are visually transformed into almost weightless and ethereal adornments of this struggle. Through a mixed media approach of painting, design, and photography, I create images that show the beauty and radiance within the pressures and weights of black womanhood.

Since graduating, he has been working in the field and doing art full-time since the late 90s. He was a style pioneer for the city, creating many of the first large-scale murals, which he started doing while attending school. Having artists for parents and growing up in a small town in Arizona instilled a love of nature and design early on. Often elements of the environment inspire his work, whether in color or form. His refined letter style often has elements of light and shadow to increase depth. He also loves anatomy, whether in the animal or human world. As well as painting a diverse range of styles, he also donates his time to helping others advance in their skills. He primarily uses spray paint, and his motto is "spreading love through aerosol attacks" and plans to keep at it till it's over...

Often connecting childhood memories, the artist bore witness to the ways in which households have adapted to new American middle-class lifestyles with homes, walls and furniture adorned with ephemera of color, texture, patterns and items

It is from that here Rolón takes inspiration and transforms these vantage points producing a hybrid language of exuberant flora paintings, sculpture, social practice and site-specific installations composed of diverse materials that offer opportunities for self-reflection, rich symbolism and community engagement, bridging the divide between public and private. Rolón explores how cultivated settings and social barriers operate and its relationship to postcolonial spaces. The work is at once melancholic, excessive and exuberant, poised somewhere between celebration and regret. Inviting the viewer to engage in discourse and discussion.

This mural presents a captivating, multi-layered narrative within its frame, artfully conjuring the illusion of depth and dimension within the existing space. Cascading wall and Tromple frame motifs create an intriguing interplay that invites viewers to explore the mural's multi-level concept. This design not only allows observers to immerse themselves in a rich, spatial experience but also encourages them to take the time to fully fathom the mural's profound depth.

Drawing inspiration from the dynamic spirit of St. Louis, this mural incorporates symbolic elements that resonate with the city's identity. The depiction of Cardinals soaring through the skies pays homage to the storied tradition of the great baseball team, the St. Louis Cardinals. Meanwhile, the towering man-made arch—a defining emblem of St. Louis—punctuates the cityscape backdrop, signifying a cornerstone of the city's western passage.

Lady Pink was born in Ecuador but raised in NYC. When she started writing graffiti at the age of 15, she quickly became known as the only female capable of competing with the boys in the graffiti subculture during 1979-1985. She has been considered a cult figure in the hip-hop subculture since the release of the motion picture "Wild Style" in 1982, in which she starred. She began exhibiting paintings in galleries while still in High School and, at 21, had her first solo exhibition. As a leading participant in the rise of graffiti-based art, Lady Pink's canvases have entered collections such as the Whitney Museum, the MET NYC, the Brooklyn Museum, the Tate Modern

London, The MoMA NYC, the Museum of Fine Art in Boston, and many others. Today, she is well documented as a community activist by creating murals throughout the world and mobilizing artists to create in culturally neglected communities. She has brought her artwork full circle from the subways and commuters to the cultured and elite in galleries, back to working-class neighborhoods. Lady Pink and her husband, Smith, are one of the few professional mural teams to arise from the graffiti subculture. THIS POEM

This is a spirit poem

Beating my breast like a drum

Hot like jujū

A sweatin/soulta poem

Dragging swansongs and silence like night

Dragging rusted chains w/ no grace

Pulling the weavin and waitin

Thru the middle passage

A sweaten/covin poem

With screaming in the eye...

This is a today poem/a callin poem

To break the yoke of lies

And be blessed

A woman calling poem to walk in grace

Thru her storm, suck up the light drink Fresh water take her place in the sun

And be healed

A man calling poem to rise up make his bed Gather his loins/his courage/

His babies / his women

And be healed...

A children calling poem to smother the anger of their now-ness

Soak-up the sunshine of their newness

Feel the power...

This is not a revelation poem

But a revolution poem

Because revolutions are born

Out of the evolution of every Generation

This poem may never be heard

But it will keep on hearing

This poem may never be seen

But it will keep on seeing

SO DON'T TRY TO KILL THIS POEM

JUST KEEP WRITING

Katherine Bernhardt (b. 1975) was born in St. Louis, Missouri, and received a BFA from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago in 1998 and an MFA from the School of Visual Arts, New York, in 2000.

Bernhardt's boundless visual appetite has established her as one of the most energetic painters working today. Tacos, coffee makers, toilet paper, cigarettes, E.T., Garfield, Darth Vader, and the Pink Panther make unlikely visual combinations within expansive fields of exuberant color. With Bernhardt's blunt yet lyrical approach, each painting has the feel of a complete thought that engages the artist's rich and raucous free association. Her influences span from Henri Matisse and the Pattern and Decoration movement to Peter Doig and Chris Ofili. In a palette that ranges from restrained to vivid Day-Glo, Bernhardt paints the canvases face up on her studio floor, employing spray paint, puddles of thinned-out acrylic, and utilitarian brushwork to emphasize aspects of her motifs. Bernhardt's process is improvisational and loose, at times inviting accident and chance into the works, as well as asserting an equal relationship between artist and material. Bernhardt lives and works in St. Louis.
